Tell us briefly: What do you actually do?

I'm an electrical engineer. However, I don't build machines (anymore), but advise companies on how they can master their challenges thanks to technology - specifically artificial intelligence and robotics.

You've already written a book for adults - how did you get the idea to address children now?

The topic is important for all ages and the earlier you learn about it, the better. When I was writing a book for adults, I thought a lot about how I could explain complex technical issues in a simple way. At some point, I had the idea of writing a book for children. Besides, I have two children myself and my son wanted me to do this.

What would you like to achieve with this book?

I would like children to learn in an entertaining way how (intelligent) machines work, how we can teach them new things and what consequences this can have. Artificial intelligence is becoming more and more present in our everyday lives, so it's about time that we offer children access to it as well. But even before dealing with all the technical information, my main concern is to arouse children's curiosity. Getting them curious is a first big step!

What would you say if the best friend of one of your children was a robot?

We actually have a little robot at home and my son loves to play with it. But unfortunately our robot is not a friend, it's just a fun toy. In that sense, Roxy is unique ;-)

Nina is a normal teenager. But many of those around her make her feel otherwise. That's because Nina has been in a wheelchair since a riding accident one and a half years ago. But after a sporting showdown, everything turns out differently: Fabian is really nice to Nina without his peers, and he even starts to get her interested in skateboarding. Online, together they discover the world of WCMX:

What Timo Can Do

In his dreams, Timo travels somewhere every night. Up in the sky through cotton candy clouds. Into a jungle full of dangerous animals that become tame as Timo pets them. Or into a world full of fantastic, geometric elements. Every time Timo tells the other children in the crèche about his travels the next morning, they don't believe him and just laugh at him. Only little Ava knows better and defends Timo. When the next day they go on the swings next to one another, they soon pass the cotton clouds and fly higher and higher – right into the world where the dreams live.

Hagar, the Horrible

There is a new girl on the playground in the yard. Her name is Hagar. Hagar is different from the other kids whose mothers sit at the corners of the sandbox every afternoon watching carefully over their children. Hagar does what she feels like. When one day, she climbs in the apple tree, dangerously high, in order to harvest apples, the non-conformist girl triggers something in the mothers, something they had almost forgotten about when they see and smell the sweet red apples on the ground: A sense of cooperation. They forget their fears and decide to bake a cake – altogether!
